Oh, and if you haven't paid that much attention to the monitoring results: The only thing they ever see with the monitors is when the wind dies down, the fog sets in and all the exhaust from vehicles, drill rigs, generators, etc tends to stay low to the ground. Nothing has been picked up that shows elevated explosivity, or a build up of volatile gases. Mostly its been some carbon monoxide. They do occasionally pick up odors, but the monitors haven't been recording anything.
